

Contents

Introduction	vii
1 Background Information and Theory	1
A Thumbnail Description of Hungary	1
Language Globalisation	6
Language Attitudes and Language Learning Motivation	9
2 Method	22
Research Design and Focus Areas	22
Participants	23
Instruments	27
Data Collection Procedures	29
Data Analysis	30
3 Language Attitudes and Motivation in Hungary:
From 1993 to 2004	32
Computing Attitudinal and Motivational Dimensions	32
Motivational Dimensions: Language Rank Order and Changes over Time	42
Analysis of the Two Criterion Measures: Intended Effort and Language Choice	51
4 Modifying Factors in Language Attitudes and Motivation: Gender, Geographical Location and School Instruction	55
Gender Differences	55
Geographical Variation in Language Attitudes and Language Preferences	59
Language Attitudes and Language Instruction	68
5 The Internal Structure of Language Learning Motivation	73
Structural Equation Modelling	74
Applying SEM in our Study	75
The Measurement Models	76
The Initially Tested Full Structural Model	79

The Final Full Structural Model	82
The Proposed Theoretical Construct	89
The 'L2 Motivational Self System'	91
6 Language Learners' Motivational Profiles	95
Cluster Analysis	95
The Definition of Motivational Groups/Profiles	97
Group Performance on the Criterion Measures	99
The Difference Between Groups 2 and 3	102
The Size and Gender Composition of the Various Motivational Groups	105
Target Language Interference in Language Choice and Intended Effort	107
Target Language Interference: Focus on English and German	113
7 The Effects of Intercultural Contact on Language Attitudes and Language Learning Motivation	118
Students' Perception of the Number of Visitors	119
Factor Analysis of the Contact Variables	121
The Impact of Objective and Subjective Contact on the L2-Specific Variables in 1999	122
The Combined Effect of Objective and Subjective Contact on German in 1999	126
Discussion of the Contact–Attitude Relationship in the 1999 Dataset	127
The Contact–Attitude Relationship in the Light of the 2004 Data	130
Summary and Conclusion	142
Language Globalisation	142
Motivation and the Self	145
Intercultural Contact	147
Final Words	149
References	150
Appendices	157
Index	203